Coaching A Winning Team

"Coaching is continuous. A coach watches the team no matter what other stress is around. It is the coach's job to remove a tired player, see a nervous pitcher, watch for frustration, and so forth. The coach does this even though the general manager is making demands, the score is behind, the fans are asking for autographs, and a team member is injured."

"Employees get frustrated, isolated and overwhelmed. It is the director's role to recognize these situations and intercede before they become insurmountable or threatening to the health of the team." This information taken from Exchange Magazine Article "A Director's Game Plan: Ten Strategies for Coaching a Winning Team," by Pam Schiller.
